Grandma's Halloween Stories

A mother's delight are her grandchildren. For this "grandmother" a special time for her was to share Halloween. The grandchildren would always stop at grandma's house dressed in their costumes prior to their night of trick or treating and listened to spooky stories of ghost, goblins, and witches. As grandma read her stories, her grandchildren listen wide-eyed and spellbound. Little did the children know, though they may have suspected, Grandma was the witch in her stories. Surely not, the children "all agreed, the stories were not true" – but fun to tell and read. No witch could brew a magic stew or cast a magic spell! That is all just make believe for nights like Halloween" . . . or was it?

Aggie Boyle & the Lost Beauty

"Who am I?" is the question keeping Aggie Boyle up at night. On the surface she's a seventh grader from a town near Salem where her family has lived for centuries. At school, she's an outcast because of her unconventional appearance, and has difficulties making new friends since her best friend disappeared three years prior. At home, her mother treats her with icy disregard for reasons Aggie doesn't understand, while all she has left of her father is his ring emblazoned with a strange design. With the horizons of her life shrinking, Aggie feels more lost and alone than ever. Until one day, she awakens to an unexpected transformation and begins an adventure that leads her to a colonial village with surprising inhabitants. With the help of some new friends, Aggie must discover her own magical origins, as well as her own destiny as a witch. If she can't find the inner strength and courage to save the town, it—and she—will be destroyed by a magic as ancient as it is evil.

Woulda Been

When Paw, the hardworking farmer and patriarch, passes away, Jess and his family struggle to move on. They keep thinking about how Paw woulda been tending the fields and gardens, how he woulda been at Jess's 10th birthday party to help him blow out the candles, and how he woulda been readying Boots, the farm's newest Jersey calf, for the county fair. As the seasons change, they feel his absence every day. But when what woulda been Paw's 78th birthday rolls around, Jess and his family decide to celebrate his life and memory by throwing a Woulda Been party with all their closest friends. In this heartfelt and inspiring story, Jess learns how to overcome his woulda been mentality through community, remembrance, and giving back.

Freckles are Fabulous

Freckles are Fabulous is a story for children about finding self-confidence in the face of bullying, and accepting others without judging their appearance.

The protagonist, Jackie, learns to accept her freckles with the mantra her Grandmother teaches her "FRECKLES ARE FABULOUS!" Jackie's grandmother calls them "sun kisses" and gives Jackie a new perspective on her freckles, the same freckles that her bully Kimmy called ugly.

The antagonist, Kimmy, learns the error of her bullying when she develops freckles herself. In the end, Jackie takes the high ground and helps Kimmy accept that her "FRECKLES ARE FABULOUS!"
